2017 Seminar Series

9 May - Seminar 1: "Can there ever be affordable Family Law?"

Presenter	Professor Patrick Parkinson, A.M, University of Sydney
Abstract	Despite numerous reforms to the Family Law Act 1975 over many years, the current operation of the family law system continues to be a source of great dissatisfaction to almost everyone caught up in it - including many judges. For legally represented people, it is hugely expensive – far more than most people can reasonably afford. Part of the cost is due to the very long delays (sometimes two to three years) before getting to trial and the number of court events required before reaching that point. The standard response to these problems is to call for more resources - especially more judges. This will help – of course; but there are many reforms that could be made within the existing budgetary envelope to ensure that the system works much better for ordinary Australians. These reforms include obligations on practitioners and judges similar to those contained in the Civil Procedure Act 2005 (NSW) to facilitate the just, quick and cheap resolution of the real issues in the proceedings; the greater use of costs orders against people who pursue unreasonable or unnecessary applications or responses to applications; greater enforcement of the duty to try to sort out matters without filing legal proceedings, listing priority to be given to parties who can demonstrate that they have taken all reasonable steps to try to resolve their dispute; the expansion of arbitration, and the use of default rules to remove certain categories of case from the courts entirely. This paper is intended to stimulate a dialogue between the courts, the legal profession and the government about what can be done to make family law more affordable – both for litigants and taxpayers - and more effective to assist ordinary Australians at an extraordinarily difficult time in their lives.

27 July - Seminar 2: "Causation and Loss of Opportunity"

Presenter	The Hon. Justice David Jackson, Supreme Court of Queensland
Abstract	Causation is a necessary element in a damages claim. The typical causal question at common law is whether the claimant's loss was caused by the defendant's wrong? However, relatively recently courts have focussed closer attention on what will answer the causal question yes or no. Correspondingly, recently courts have allowed or denied recovery of damages for loss of an opportunity to obtain a better financial or physical outcome as damage caused by the defendant's wrong. Around the common law world, some surprising differences have marked these developments. In Australia, damages are recoverable for loss of a valuable commercial opportunity to receive a benefit but not for loss of an opportunity for a better medical outcome. In the United States, it is the other way around. England and Wales have a different legal structure as well. This lecture will attempt to trace the differing developments, the reasons for them and to offer some tentative suggestions as to where the law might further develop.

2017 Seminar Series

17 August - Seminar 3: "Statute Law and Common Law"

Presenter Adam Pomerence QC

Abstract The Constitution, the statute law of the Commonwealth, States and Territories, and the common law of Australia have been said together to form 'one system of jurisprudence'. The 'symbiotic' relationship between the common law and statute law has been the subject of increasing attention in Australia in recent years. That attention is warranted given the exponential growth in the volume and scope of statute law throughout Australia. The issues that arise extend beyond statutory interpretation and direct statutory modification of the common law. They include the implications of giving common law concepts statutory force and remedies, and the capacity of statute law to influence the content and development of the common law in areas beyond the direct operation of the statute. Coherence across Australia's 'one system of jurisprudence' has emerged as an important consideration, although it is yet to be fully developed.

2 November - Seminar 4: "Criminal Omissions Liability"

Presenter Andrew Ashworth, CBE, QC, DCL, Emeritus Vinerian Professor of English Law, University of Oxford

Abstract Is there anything wrong with holding a person criminally liable for another's act or failure to act? In what types of situation does contemporary criminal law go beyond the principle that a person should only be penalised for conduct or consequences that he or she was at fault for bringing about? Is that a principle that should generally be respected, or does the current emphasis on security and prevention justify a more 'pragmatic' criminal law? The lecture will explore these fundamental questions in the context of omissions offences, preventive offences, corporate criminal liability and other developments.
